

Baradari

Ruins of Baradari Buildings with Probable Underground Cells and Passage

Baradari (Lat. 25° 04' 31" N., Long.- 87° 46' 47" E.) is situated at a distance of about 32 km from the district headquarter of Sahebganj and about 480 km from Ranchi, the capital city of Jharkhand. Baradari is also known as Nageswarbagh. Some scholars attribute its construction to Fateh Jung Khan, rival of Raja Man Singh (1592 CE), whereas others attribute it to Mir Kasim Ali (prior to 1763 CE.), the Nawab of Bengal.

Built on high ground the building consists of an immense wall of bricks of about 9-meter height on a platform measuring about 18.10 x 16.25 meter. Presently, the remains of the wall are measuring 5 meter in height. There is a gate at one corner of the enclosure with provision for the guard-rooms. A row of apartment's runs through the inner walls, each consists of a small open court meant for women and their female attendants. There is a common arched gallery in front of all these apartments facing the interior court, in the center of which it is said, stood a super structure square on plan chiefly made of wood and known as 'Rang Mahal'. At present, we do not find any traces of such a Rang Mahal.

Conservation work at Baradari, Rajmahal, Distt. Sahebganj

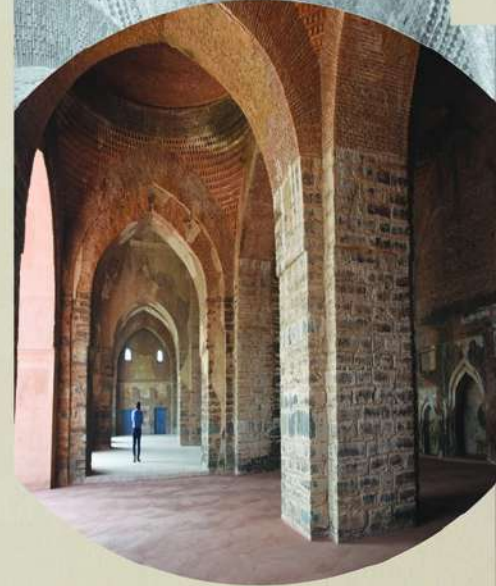

Structural repairs to the complex including providing RR stone retaining wall all around to prevent the erosion of the soil and collapse of the structure was carried out in a phased manner.

Monument is open from sunrise to sunset
Entry Fee: Free
Photography permitted (without tripod)
Videography charges Rs 25/- email- circleran.asi@gmail.com

THE JAMMA MASJID & BARADARI

Distt. Sahebganj, Jharkhand

प्रत्नकीर्त्तिमपावृणु

Archaeological survey of india

Ranchi Circle